The Arizona Supreme Court has declined to hear the Town of Marana's case relating to wastewater. The municipality is seeking voter approval to own and operate a wastewater facility in the March election.

This March, Marana's first all vote-by-mail election offers another opportunity for a decision about the future of the community. Two wastewater questions are on the Town's ballot. Arizona law requires voter authorization for the Town to acquire existing utility operations.

The primary question

Asks whether the Town shall be authorized to own and operate a wastewater system. This system currently serves about 2,100 customers in the northwest part of Marana, where the Town is also the water provider. This area is largely undeveloped. If the Town of Marana is authorized to own and operate the system, the Town will have the benefits and responsibilities of serving this large area where significant growth is planned.

The second question

Asks whether the Town shall be authorized to own and operate the small Rillito Vista wastewater treatment facility as part of the overall system. Pima County's proposal also requires the Town to operate this 60-customer system as part of a settlement of the wastewater negotiations.
